

ABSTRACT

The present invention provides a method for providing high-capacity translation service in a mobile communication system, such as a cellular phone system, by incorporating a translating apparatus into a communication network. The invention provides the translation service in real time irrespective of the speakers' locations as long as the network is accessible. Further, the method of the present invention determines a translation fee in addition to a call rate by counting time required for the translation with an accounting apparatus provided in the network.